Lecture in the series ‘The State in a Globalizing World: Problematic, yet indispensable’

Abstract: The European Union is long seen as a masterpiece of regionalization and aligning national interests. In several regions of the world it is seen as an example how to realize better cooperation and stronger representation in the international arena. But Europe is in crisis since the financial crisis of 2008. What seemed a successful process appeared to be weak because the lack of supranational power to align economies and welfare arrangements. Is Europe at a crossroad either to speed up its economic integration with inevitably the handing over of more decision making to Brussels? What could that mean for the role of the national state in Europe?

Speaker: Prof. Dr. Ummu Salma Bava is Professor of European Studies at the Centre for European Studies, School of International Studies, Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi, India. She also serves as guest faculty at the Foreign Service Institute, Ministry of External Affairs (New Delhi); and is Associate Fellow of the Asia Society (New York). She is one of the leading experts in India on contemporary Indian and European foreign and security policy. Her other focus areas are European and South Asian politics, regional integration and organization, international politics, globalization, and norms and conflict resolution. She has just started a project on Indian Foreign Policy in a Globalised World.
